? But what is a proxy? Almost definitely not, actually. Some players also use them for more “authentic” playtesting of decks before they spend crazy amounts of money on them. If it becomes a normal thing to proxy insanely expensive and powerful cards, you’re all probably going to end up doing it. They can be fun, but they’re controversial. If Wizards went around being honest about the fact that doing it for personal use probably won’t get their attention, they’d lose a lot of legal ground. Got tilted and shuffled your poor cards into a bent mess? Something about watching factory machines do the same thing over and over again and listening to the narrator’s soothing voice was super captivating. That’s basically the main thing that separates proxies from counterfeits. PDF templates give you something to work with, and you can find plenty of them online. Etsy is a good spot, but you’ll probably have to provide the seller with the file you want printed. They’re perfect for kitchen table Magic, but anywhere outside of your own playgroup is either a straight up “no” or a “probably not.” It’s always best to check and make sure first in any case, but anything competitive or even vaguely non-casual is a heavy “almost definitely not.” Proxies aren’t legal in MTG, and depending on how they’re made, they sometimes skirt the line of legal in general.  support different card size ? Our Pick If you’re looking for professionally printed proxies, our quick recommendation is PrintingProxies.com — they have every art version, fast shipping, and great looking proxies: Proxies from PrintingProxies.com The Fun Stuff: Ethics and Legality True Conviction | Illustration by Ekaterina Burmak Here’s the thing with proxies. Any printing service that knows what it’s doing will refuse to print Magic cards for you because they know that it’s copyrighted material and can’t print it without permission. Since I couldn’t find a proxy maker suiting my need, I made my own. Make Them Yourself Whirlermaker | Illustration by Victor Adame Minguez The first and potentially easiest way to get proxies is to make them yourself. The site also has every single card in Magic available and prints for you on demand. Obviously, you can’t use proxies in just any scenario. Any old printer will get the job done but it might not be what you’re expecting. Maybe try taking a few deep breaths before you ruin all your other decks. They mostly talk about DCI-sanctioned events, but they also mention counterfeits and playtest cards. There’s a pretty wide range for how to make a “proxy.” Some people just write the name and abilities on a piece of paper covering a reversed card in a sleeve, some write the name of a card on the back of a bulk card like basic lands, and many people just print out the card in question. mtgpress.net is down, but alternatives include proxymtg, MTG Proxy Generator and . This is a very convenient way to get a Black Lotus or some dual land lookalikes for your cube at an affordable price. Plenty of people have the means to print really nice looking and feeling proxies. This reddit thread has plenty of helpful options for you on how to make hundreds of proxies easily and for relatively cheap. Let me know in the comments down there, or hop over to our Discord for a longer chat! I should probably plug something else before I go, right? Selecting editions at Printing Proxies If you’re looking to make completely custom cards or want to use your own art, there are other options. eBay might get a little weird and counterfeit-y, though, so be careful over there. Their site is easy to use, has a mass card list upload, they’ve got a bunch of options you can mess with for your proxies.  can print decklist ? You can’t just make MTG cards to sell or distribute. There is technically a difference between proxy and counterfeit cards, but some people kind of use them interchangeably. You’ll obviously also need a color printer, somewhere to work, and a PDF of the card you’ll be printing. “Official” Proxies Tournaments are a whole other bag. They’ve got a whole post from back in 2016 after some LGS debacle on the subject of proxies and counterfeits. I can’t afford to pay for a card I wont like after two or three games. WotC hasn’t said too much on the subject of proxies over the years, but they have said some things. It’s pretty easy, and your result is going to look pretty awesome. When it comes to any singles that you could potentially find at an LGS? My recommendation is going to go to Printing Proxies. Tokens are a great way to customize your deck and making your own means you can use whatever art you want! This is probably the only thing that would ever get me into proxies or making them myself. Counterfeit cards and proxy cards aren’t technically the same. Thanks for your time, and I’m about out of words now. Maybe you want to create a higher-powered cube for you and your friends or just something fun and crazy with custom cards. Basically, you can’t use proxies/playtest cards at DCI-sanctioned events, Wizards is very against counterfeit cards (surprise surprise), and they don’t care about proxy/playtest cards made for personal use. Basically any card that is just about impossible to find or wildly expensive if you ever do manage to find it. They also might just be a homemade version of a card that’s not feasible to get. Printed proxies might have each card art, different abilities, or just be a straight up custom card that doesn’t exist in Magic. Any non-official cards are, I’m sure you guessed, not allowed in competitive play. But we’re done now, and I’ve only got a few more things to say before we can both move on with our days. They’ve also got an easy dropdown menu where you can choose which version of each card you want to print. Cards fall off the table and get squished? Think the infamous Black Lotus. Proxy cards shouldn’t be indistinguishable from their official counterparts. In some cases, they’re even a little bit necessary. I’m not surprised by their stance on all of this, and I’m not surprised on their vagueness when it comes to what they actually consider a proxy/playtest card. That’s all the legal jargon, but what about ethics? I don’t want to keep copy/paste image in a document editor (Libre Office, Microsoft Word, or whatever). How to Make Special Proxies Did anybody here ever watch that show How It’s Made? The best way is actually using existing foil cards. However, you might get into some slippery slopes in terms of proxies versus counterfeits and the ethics of the whole thing, but I went over that already so we’ll just move on to some options for you. It’s also got a stats window, which will give you some info about the cards you’ve designed like average mana cost, how many rares there are, and more. can skip basic land ? I’ve talked about this before, so I’m basically just gonna say the same thing here as I did there. Page 2 Inkfathom Proxy is a webapp to format and display a mtg deck to create proxies. Follow Draftsim for awesome articles and set updates: MTG MTG cards MTG proxies MTG proxy cards I’m about out of juice for the day, so I’m gonna wrap it up now. What happens at your kitchen table games with your friends is between you and them. Then there’s Magic Set Editor, which looks pretty cool. WotC owns the rights to the card’s artwork, either through first printing rights (most likely) or full purchased rights (less likely). A great but expensive game. Probably not. Does the format they’re used in change your stance at all? I mean, they’re outsourced to a printing press, but you get my point. But what about cards that are printed by a third party? That’s going to end up in actual losses not just for WotC (boohoo), but likely for your LGS as well. Or they think a counterfeit card is actually a proxy card, or vice versa. They might step in if you try to use them at your LGS or a DCI-sanctioned event, but personal use just isn’t worth their time or money. Don’t go splashing water everywhere or throwing your cards around just cause you want a proxy. I don’t know about you, but I certainly can’t afford a large majority of cards from Magic’s past that go for hundreds, thousands, or even hundreds of thousands of dollars. Some printers are better than others in general, of course, but what’s the best printer for proxies?  support emblems ?  support different paper size  ? Look-a-like Magic cards just for personal use are already toing the line. Bare old vanillaJS and HTML/CSS, as long as you follow our code of conduct. You will need some patience to get this done, even if it’s relatively simple. I don’t really have a whole lot to say on the topic, so I’ll focus on what I’m interested in when it comes to token proxies. It lets you export to an HTML file, Apprentice, or CCG Lackey if you wanna play with them online. Anyone can contribute, participate, submit issue, etc. There are sites out there that will do the formatting for you. Where can you get them? They don’t need to be competing with proxies, too. Realistically, I think proxies are ethically fine when it comes to anything on the reserved list, as a start. Powering Down Proxies Angel of Finality | Illustration by Howard Lyon Well, that was a lot. Proxy. DCI-sanctioned events will sometimes have judges print proxies if a card is accidentally damaged. Tokens Eldrazi Spawn token | Illustration by Veronique Meignaud This is arguable the least controversial and ethically-questionable type of proxy. Proxies are a lot of things. Before you start, make sure you’ve got a foil Magic card, double-sided tape, acetone, spray adhesive, transparent printer sheets, and a soft rag. I just don’t think you’re gonna like it. Proxy Sites When it comes to proxy sites, I actually had some trouble finding a good one. Everything works client-side. You can’t export high quality images, so this might not be the best option for you depending on what you want to do with them. If your proxy is very official-looking and it’s hard to tell that it’s a proxy, you’re getting into dangerous territory. Everything I’ve already mentioned gives you a base for how to make your own proxies or where to get them, but making a cube means you’re going to need proxies in bulk. Easy Prey | Illustration by Ekaterina Burmak I’m so glad you asked! Proxies are basically just homemade copies or stand-ins for MTG cards. No more no less. Getting Your Hands on Proxies Now that I’ve gotten all the downers out of the way, let’s get to the fun stuff.  support flip card   WIP  support custom card  ? There’s a big tradeoff in quality depending on how much you invest, so if you only need a few, you may be better off just ordering them. It might be a bit of an obsession but it’s fine. Reddit has some general proxy subs, and there are some for MTG proxies specifically, too. What’s the different between a proxy and a counterfeit card? If you’ve got a printer you could just print out the cards you want on regular paper and then sleeve them with reversed MTG cards. Fools There are a few different ways you can make foil proxies at home. They’re not even that difficult to make yourself if you’ve got a bit of time. It is a trading card game after all. They specifically mention that playtest/proxy cards don’t have official art, though, which isn’t surprising. Well, we do, and there it is. unlock origin wont block anything on the page. I don’t think I’ve ever mentioned our Facebook page, so here you go. Ethical, not ethical, do you care at all? That being said, do I think Wizards is going to bust down your door because you printed a realistic-looking playset of the Power 9 to use at your kitchen table games? I’m here to answer all of your questions on the topic. How do you make proxies, where can you get them, how to print them, etc. Their definition of proxy/playtest cards is super basic, only including when a card has the info for another card written over it. If you feel the need to hide your use of proxies, you’ve already got your answer as to whether or not you should be using them. I used to watch that all the time when I was a kid. As a result, I’m kind of way too into finding out how various things are made. The latter is the type of proxy I wanna talk about today. Even if they’re not going to go after people for printing MTG cards with official art for personal use, they still have to uphold their legal right to do that.  can specify a language   can specify a set ? You can check out what other people have made along with making your own. If you want to really step up your game, though, laser color printers will be your best friend. “Accidentally” is also important there. It’s also probably very intentional that they used the word “playtest” and not “proxy,” but that’s a whole other conversation. I’m obviously talking about proxies. Pair that with a card editing software for any last-minute tweaks and you’re good to go! Proxy Cube If you’re into Cube at all, proxies might have come up before.
